Always love these maps

Portable and easy to read.

Closest map to Streetwise one can find.

I just got back from London and this map, which fits neatly in my hand, made the journey much easier and navigable. I never thought I'd go back to printed maps but London is HUGE and it's hard to get perspective from a Google map. Plus, this one is laminated so it doesn't crumble in my bag. Impressive to see how much info the designer has packed into it -- yet it's still readable. It's got the entire public transportation system, some of the key highlights and tourist attractions, and it spans from Kensington to The City and beyond. Amazing and compact. I don't think I'll return without it.

We still need real maps -the electronic ones show too little of a longer trip, get confused, run out of battery life, can't be read in bright sun. We still need real maps, but they are facing stiff competition, so they have to be good: easily folded and re-folded, water-proof, large enough to read on the march and easy to read in poor or too much light. Not many qualify. But the vanDam StreetSmart London is all of the above, and we wish we'd had it with us the last time we got lost (in a taxi!) in London. From now on, we won't leave home for London without this map!

I found the map to be somewhat small, which made it difficult to read, especially the London Tube portion of the map. It is nicely laminated, and it fits in a back pocket.

I found this really helpful walking around London as it covered the main downtown area. The subway map was helpful as well. It rained a lot while I was there making the plastic lamination over the map critical to be able to use it the whole time. After carrying and using it for 5 days, it still looks like new. I missed having a broader perspective to get trains to outlying areas, but those were easy to look up on line before I went or get help in the train station. But most of my touring was downtown and easily covered by the map. I still have more to see for next time and will happily use the same map then.

nice size, crisply printed, old eyes, so need a magnifier, but that's my problem and not the map's. It will be well used on my upcoming trip. Like the laminate so I can highlight a route and then wipe it later. Recommend.
