A dedicated reggae fan from a young age, Oliver Hill began his lasting relationship with Jamaica like many Americans-through the island's music. Friendships with fellow students of Jamaican heritage in high school ultimately led Oliver to visit the island, where he established a recording studio in a Kingston suburb in partnership with a local artist. Frequent trips to Spain and other destinations throughout his youth gave Oliver a global perspective on life and an unquenchable thirst for experiencing new places and cultures. Later, a masters program in journalism at Columbia University took Oliver back to Jamaica with a film crew to shoot Coping with Babylon, a chronicle of contemporary Rastafarian philosophy that has appeared in international film festivals around the world and as part of an exhibition at the Smithsonian titled "Discovering Rastafari." Oliver has worked as a video editor, ornithologist, and financial writer, and currently works as a correspondent for mergermarket, a Financial Times Group publication, in Latin America. Quick service. Very informative book.

This is a great book for planning your trip to Jamaica, guiding you around on your visit, and to keep as souvenir of your trip. I spent 10 days in Jamaica in November 2016, staying in Negril, Boston Bay, Blue Mountains and Kingston. I used both this Moon guide and the Lonely Planet guide to Jamaica, so I can directly compare them. The LP guide is fine but the Moon guide is better. The obvious advantages of Moon are that it is more up-to-date (November 2016 vs October 2014) and it has more photos (making it a better souvenir of your trip). I also prefer the writing style and maps in the Moon guide. But most important is that the Moon guide has better information about what to see, how to get to places and where to eat. (The "where to stay sections" are more similar in both books.) Examples: the White River Valley near Ochos Rios is not mentioned in the LP guide; the Reach Falls and Blue Mountain Peak sections of the Moon guide were much more useful than the equivalent LP sections; and the section on the jerk centre at Boston Bay was more accurate in Moon than LP. Overall, you get the sense that Oliver Hill (the author of the Moon guide) knows Jamaica better than do the LP authors.
