Kulback tells a tale of another, not so long ago time. The Baja changed forever with the completion of the peninsular highway in 1973. He finds himself on the tale end of living in the remote, but quite civilized, Baja. A, literal, "Master" of the Sea, (USCG 50 Ton Master) Kulback brings his experience to the reader when he sails to and from ports in the Sea of Cortez and Mainland Mexico. Home for him is many places, but Bahia de los Angeles is his special spot. He loses love and leaves boats around the Baja, commuting occasionally to work in the US to support himself and build his boats. The completion and opening of Mexico Highway 1 in 1973 closed an era, sometimes called the Baja Golden Age. Kulback reminds us of why, as through his years of adventure he lives out the last of the Era of Freedom in the Garden of Eden known as the Sea of Cortez. Kulback acknowledges one universal constant of Baja writers of any age: The kindness and generosity of the Baja Californians.

This book packs so much in just 155 pages: hope, joy, sadness, romance, adventure, sailing tips, and historical documentation to name a few. Since I too sailed Baja in the '70s, I couldn't resist the chance to take a trip down memory lane. I would say that Mr. Kulbach truly captured the essence of those times. The wonderful and not so wonderful eccentric characters "boat people" meet; the surprises that arose rounding each new point of land; sailing without the gadgets and gizmos of today. I loved the chapter about "Tina." And, the adventure he and Patti had sailing north - experiencing their visit on a tuna fishing boat - that the captain would risk having a black cat on board rather than his attractive wife. I understand that although Rod has written numerous sailing articles, this is his first book (?). It seems to me, since he traveled those waters until 1989, there are surely enough additional adventures and memories to write another. I certainly hope so. The only thing missing from this book are photographs. Rod paints many lovely images with his words. But a photo here and there would be surely appreciated.

This is my fourth book. I've lent the others out or gave the others away. A great story.
