Synopsis

She secretly longs for adventure and the love of a man who won't try and change her but knows she is hoping for too much. She knows that all the men of her acquaintance would banish poor Aunt Clara to a sanatorium and she will not let that happen. But keen of mind, and inspired by a special day spent at the botanic gardens Marietta begins to wonder if there just might be more to life after all. Byron Hemphwaite is a disappointment, to his own parents at least. But he has never let it stop him from following his passions. A highly respected lepidopterist, he has found success and contentment, but he longs to find love too. But, just as he thinks he may have found such joy a family tragedy tears him away to Faith Creek, Texas. But, being so useless, he forgot to ask the love of his life for her hand in marriage before he left. He knows she is pretty and clever, witty and delightful, and why should she wait for him? Will he be too late to win the woman he loves back?

Wonderful story. The exciting beginnings, family loyalty. It was interesting how people cross our lives, being strangers yet they grow in our hearts. True love triumphs in the end. Great story. You will enjoy this one

I enjoyed this story, it was a pleasure to read a story of adventure and romance that didn't have me skip reading though torrid love scenes. The author has done a great job of telling her story.
