Former Mayor of Harpers Ferry Architect Kip Stowell AIA, teams up with native born son Walton Danforth Stowell II Master of Architecture, to form Stowell Architects and provide the public with a book called "Harpers Ferry Houses". Publication of the book in 2008 commemorates 100 years of the Kaplon-Stowell House, and 175 years of the IOOF.

Authors Kip and Walton Stowell have spent many years living and designing in the Town of Harpers Ferry at Stowell Galleries. Anyone reading the book is invited to journey into the history, landscape and architecture of Harpers Ferry's houses. Pass through Colonial, Federal, Victorian, and various Modern periods and styles in order to get a better understanding of the National Treasure that is Harpers Ferry, West Virginia. It is a street by street tour of the Town, complete with a unique Harpers Ferry architectural classification guide. The scope of this book transcends conventional architecture with essays on applied philosophy, a glossary of regional terms, and artistic images not found in other books. Plus, it's a really cute little book!

Kip and Walton Stowell have provided an incredibly extensive collection of photos of Harpers Ferry houses. In addition to being a historic town, Harpers Ferry is also home to its residents. It remains "home" to many of us who have left. As a former resident, the book took me down memory lane. I am so impressed with Kip's and Walton's foresight to have started this collection of photographs and I am judging that it is a culmination of more than 30 years work. Congratulations and thanks to Kip, Walton, and Nena.
